

Franklin College Sexual Harassment Resources

Where is my support? If you have been sexually assaulted, it is not your fault. Systems are in place to support students dealing with situations involving sexual harassment. For help, contact:

I NEED HELP

- Because I can't finish my assignments
- Because I missed class or an exam
- Because I am experiencing retaliation
- Finding a different room to live in
- Feeling safe on campus

You don't have to navigate these situations on your own. Support is available to you to help with these concerns and other support measures you may need.

WHO CAN I TALK TO?

Franklin College takes these issues of harassment seriously, and doesn't want the fear of reporting or retaliation to be a barrier for getting help.

Many people on campus are available to help including the Counseling & Health Center staff, the Title IX Office and faculty and staff.

If you have questions about where to start, see the "Student Guide to Responding to Sexual Harassment and Assault," available online and in print around campus.

I DON'T KNOW IF I WANT TO REPORT WHAT HAPPENED...

It's ok to take your time to process and make a decision. There is no deadline for reporting a violation of the sexual harassment policy.

In the majority of cases, you can have conversations about what happened, what options are available, and what you are considering with confidential resources without beginning a formal conduct complaint process.
